

WILDLIFE TRAFFICKING

Overview

Illegal ivory and rhino horn trafficking is an escalating global issue. Elephants and rhinos may soon be driven to extinction by poaching. The demand for elephant ivory and rhino horn, driven by China, Japan, the Philippines, the United States and other countries, has created a massive international market that has detrimental economic, social and environmental impacts in Africa. Poaching is now a sophisticated international crime racket and a national security threat with terrorist organizations using profits to finance attacks.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service recently instituted a near ban on ivory and rhino import and domestic interstate trade. But the states must regulate in-state sales. Many states have enacted or introduced a ban on ivory and rhino horn trades in their jurisdictions.

Legislation

- In 2014, New Jersey and New York became the first states to ban sales of ivory and rhino horn products. California and Washington enacted similar laws in 2015, followed by Hawaii and Oregon in 2016.
- In 2016, at least 16 states and the District of Columbia considered bills to address wildlife trafficking. A list of 2016 bills is available here.
- Some state bills include exemptions from ivory and rhino horn bans, such as antiques, musical instruments, and weapons within certain parameters; scientific, educational or museum purposes; and inheritance.

KEY POINTS

- Wildlife poaching is worth up to $20 billion per year, and ranks only behind narcotics, weapons, and human trafficking in international crime activities.
- More than 30,000 elephants are killed annually, close to 100 elephants every day. At this rate elephants will be extinct in 10-20 years. Meanwhile, there are only 28,000 rhinos left globally, and 20,000 of these are the Southern white rhino.
- At least one-third of ivory sold in the U.S. was illegally imported from recently poached elephants. Recent investigations revealed that up to 90% of ivory sold in Los Angeles and Hawaii was illegal.

WILDLIFE TRAFFICKING FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

1. What is wildlife trafficking?

The term refers to the illegal sale of wildlife parts, products or animals, especially of elephant ivory and rhino horn. Illegal ivory or horn is indistinguishable from legal ivory, causing illegal sales to unknowing consumers to skyrocket.

2. Doesn't Congress and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service regulate wildlife trafficking?

Congress and the FWS recently addressed imports, trafficking between states, and identification of nations that are major sources or consumers of illegal ivory. But it is up to individual states to regulate intrastate trade and to handle enforcement.

3. Is this issue only about protecting wildlife?

No, funds from wildlife trafficking have been linked to international terrorist organizations including Al-Shabaab and the Lord's Resistance Army. In fact, prominent members of both political parties consider wildlife trafficking to be a national security issue.

4. Why prohibit ivory sales if elephants don't live in the U.S.?

The sale of, and demand for, ivory is directly driving the extensive poaching, which could lead to elephant extinction within 10 to 20 years. The U.S. is likely the second largest consumer of ivory products in the world, and only states have the power to regulate in-state sale of these products.

5. Why are other animals included in these bills besides elephants?

Elephants and rhinos are not the only species subject to poaching. Populations of tigers, lions, sharks and other species are also being decimated by illegal wildlife trafficking and need additional protections. As a result, several states have incorporated additional at-risk species into the bans.

6. Which groups support restricting wildlife trafficking in the U.S.?

The Association of Zoos and Aquariums, Humane Society International, Defenders of Wildlife, World Wildlife Fund and many other local, state and international groups support these efforts. Contact NCEL for information about local groups in your area working on this issue.
